A message from the NOAA Administrator

Dear colleagues,

As NOAA undergoes significant staffing changes, I want to honor both the valued colleagues and friends who are departing and those who continue to advance our mission.

Last week in Silver Spring, NOAA held an event to recognize those who have served the agency with unwavering commitment and profound dedication. I know many of our field offices are also hosting their own farewell gatherings. These are important moments to come together, and I encourage everyone to join these spaces to express our gratitude to one another.

We're saying goodbye to over 1,000 staff with more than 27,000 collective years of federal service. Beyond the institutional knowledge walking out our doors, we're bidding farewell to friends and valued teammates.

To those who are departing, know that your contributions have shaped NOAA's mission and legacy. Your work here mattered and will continue to influence our future and the people who will carry it forward. We wish you the very best and hope you'll stay connected as part of our extended NOAA community.

Whether departing or staying, you are all part of the NOAA legacy. We will continue to pursue great things ahead and continue to deliver on our mission and what NOAA provides to the Nation.

Thank you for your service.

Sincerely,

Laura Grimm
